

JOINT AAL/AAS SYMPOSIUM ON 23 AUGUST – A RESOUNDING SUCCESS

The symposium on the topic “Are you sure?” sponsored jointly by the Australian Academy of Law and the Australian Academy of Science was held on Thursday 23 August in the Federal Court’s ceremonial court on Level 21 of the Law Courts Building.

In brief, the topics covered included the relationship between probability for the purposes of litigation and statistical probability, human memory, the embracing of uncertainty, and judicial understandings of judicial decision-making.

On any reckoning it was a resounding success. Both the well of the Court and the gallery were virtually full meaning that we had an audience of about 220.

The symposium was chaired by the Hon Justice Stephen Gageler and the panellists were as follows:

From the AAS: Professor Max Coltheart, Emeritus Professor of Cognitive Science, Macquarie University

Professor Kerrie Mengersen, Australian Laureate Fellow and Professor of Statistics, QUT

From the AAL: The Hon Chief Justice James Allsop, Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Australia

The Hon Robert French, former Chief Justice of the High Court of Australia

Questions and comments from the audience

There was ample opportunity for questions and comments from the audience, although apparently not ample enough: a member of the audience later emailed me to the effect that the event was a great success and that the questions could have continued for a further hour!

The time over refreshments afterwards saw further discussion of the issues that had been raised in the symposium.

The general consensus among representatives of both Academies was that a further such event should be held, and that perhaps they should even be held annually. So, watch this space.

The event was video recorded and many photographs were taken.

We hope to have the video recording and the full gallery of photographs on the Academy website soon.

ROUNDTABLE IN CANBERRA

A further roundtable for Fellows organised by Professor Michael Coper was held in Canberra on Monday 3 September.

This one was held in the Minter Ellison room, ANU College of Law.

The discussion was led by the Hon Robert French AC on the subject “A Cart without a Horse: The principle of legality without legislative intention”.

From left: Professor Michael Coper (convenor of the ACT Chapter), the guest speaker the Hon. Robert French AC, the Hon. Mary Finn (chairperson of our roundtables).

Michael Coper reports that “it was an excellent occasion, with a very stimulating, and to some extent provocative, paper on statutory interpretation” and that the speaker “was highly sceptical of the traditional search for legislative intention, framing the task of statutory interpretation rather as one of constructional choice”. Mr French reconsidered the principle of legality—that clear words are needed to oust long-established rights and freedoms—in this context.

The Fellows in the ACT are to be commended for their support for these roundtables. More than 20 members of the Academy attended.

Roundtable turnout with over 20 Fellows

The next Canberra roundtable will be held on Thursday 29 November 2018, featuring ANU Professor of International Law Don Rothwell and former Commonwealth Chief General Counsel Henry Burmester speaking on the politico-legal issues involved in the controversy surrounding China’s assertions of sovereignty over the South China Sea.
